Our River. Our Future.

The river has a history. It also has a future.

The Willamette River can be a place for our families to celebrate, fish, paddle, swim, and explore. A home for fish and wildlife. A source of prosperity for our community.

Come learn about the river cleanup and how the river's future is taking shape now. Share how you would like to learn about the river cleanup.

We want to hear from you!

The City of Portland and State of Oregon Department of State Lands are partnering with local communities to learn more about how Portlanders connect with and use the river. Community input now will help ensure that Portlanders get the river information they need in the future.

For more than a century before environmental regulation, industrial and commercial activity polluted the stretch of Willamette River between the Broadway Bridge and southern end of Sauvie Island known as Portland Harbor. This December will mark 20 years since the Environmental Protection Agency declared this 10-mile stretch as contaminated and in need of cleanup.

Thanks to those 20 years of foundational work that included testing and studying of the river we know:

- ✓ How the river became contaminated
- ✓ Where those chemicals are in the river
- ✓ Which chemicals pose a risk
- ✓ How the chemicals contaminating the river can affect the community and the environment, and
- ✓ What it will take to address the contamination

Get involved!

Community voices are needed now as the cleanup moves forward. Your voice, your insights, and your input will help ensure communities get the information they need about the river cleanup.
